

Is music better than medicine for ADHD?

W. Ian Walker has a new “music vs medicine” concept for overcoming ADHD!

W. Ian Walker's mission is to be a positive role model for adults and children who have ADHD. In the late fall of 2017, Ian's autobiography, Stirring My Soul to Sing, Overcoming ADHD Through Song, will be released.

Although Ian was told he had a learning disability in the early 1970s, he was not formally diagnosed with the disorder until 1996. In the intervening years he experienced verbal abuse, school bullying, poor academic performance, employment instability, financial hardships and failed relationships.

Despite the challenges, he persevered and now holds a degree in Theater and Film, a post-graduate Certificate in Fundraising and Volunteer Management, and is a successful Arts Consultant with over 30 years of experience. A high-achieving ADHD survivor, Ian serves as testament to countless ADHD sufferers that music can do a better job of improving their lives than medicine.

In fact, Ian will tell your audience that music saved his life and “cured him” of his disorder. This music man and arts professional takes audiences behind the lyrics, melodies and ovations in his book, to lay bare the practical lessons he has learned in coping with ADHD for over 50 years.

Show Ideas:

- Why an artistic life offers the hope of a medication-free life to those living with ADHD
- Why less than 1 in 3 children receive the proper treatment for ADHD
- The role that faith in God plays in overcoming disability issues
- How music can train your brain to better manage ADHD
- How a handshake can change your life! (Ian's Leonard Bernstein connection)
- Late Bloomers: Why it's never too late to achieve your dreams

To arrange an interview or receive more information, contact:
W. Ian Walker, Emlian Communications Group
289-700-7005 or via email at wiw@emliancommunications.org